The effect of the cyanobacterial toxin, microcystin-LR, on parasite-mediated signaling in the gill cells of the blue crab, Callinectes sapidus. Microcystin-LR (MCLR) is a cyclic heptapeptide hepatotoxin produced by the blue-green alga, Microcystis aeruginosa. MCLR has been found in tissues of shellfish and wildlife throughout the world, and it is one of the most common and dangerous pollutants found in water associated with diseased or killed organisms. To date, the actions of MCLR on crustacean tissues have not been assessed. To address this, we examined the effect of MCLR on the neuronal response in the hepatopancreas and gill of the blue crab, Callinectes sapidus, using the cAMP second messenger signaling system. Acute exposure of crabs to 1-2  $\mu\text{M}$  of MCLR induced a statistically significant decrease in intracellular cAMP concentrations in the hepatopancreas, but not in the gill. Additionally, pretreatment of crabs with 10  $\mu\text{g/ml}$  of nystatin, a fungal toxin that binds to actin filament capping proteins and is able to disrupt the cytoskeleton, caused a statistically significant decrease in intracellular cAMP concentrations in the hepatopancreas, but not in the gill. These data indicate that MCLR decreases cAMP levels in hepatopancreas cells, probably by initiating destabilization of the actin cytoskeleton.

Effects of lentinan on leukocyte function and cytokine secretion in patients with lung cancer. A previous study showed that lentinan (LNT) induced lymphokine-activated killer cells (LAK cells) in patients with lung cancer. We evaluated LNT effects on leukocyte function and cytokine production in patients with lung cancer. LNT stimulated the degranulation of natural killer (NK) cells and monocytes via NK activating receptors such as NKp46 and NKG2D, respectively. LNT also enhanced IFN- $\gamma$  production from CD4+ and CD8+ T cells, but inhibited IL-10 production from CD4+ T cells. LNT significantly increased levels of serum IL-2, IL-12, IL-15, TNF- $\alpha$ , and TNF- $\beta$ . We showed that NKG2D stimulation by LNT significantly enhanced the proliferation of tumor cells with an increase of immunoglobulin IgG1, IgG2, and IgG3. Taken together, LNT enhances the cytokines and lymphokine-activated killer cells, resulting in enhanced anti-tumor immunity.

Speech recognition is an emerging technology that enables speech input as a computer-based substitute for keyboard and mouse input. Speech recognition technology is being developed that enables a user to provide input in order to interact with a computer or other speech-activated device by speaking to it instead of typing. Although computers and other speech-activated devices typically have the ability to recognize spoken text, it is much more difficult for these devices to identify the exact sound of a word. The difficulty in identifying sound generally results in a delay and a failure to recognize words that are spoken. For example, the word "packet" may be spoken by a user with the same sound as the word "pass" or "pax" which were previously unrecognized by the speech recognition system. Previous implementations of speech recognition technology have used a speech recognizer to match an audio
